Department of Internal Medicine

August 23, 2017

Dear Friends and Patients,

It has been my honor and pleasure to serve as your doctor over these many years. Thank you for being part of “my great adventure”. It was not without a little sadness that I closed the doors at ErgoMedica for the last time on June 30th of this year. Nevertheless, I am very pleased and excited to announce that my practice has moved to join Rush University Medical Center. This new model of practice will provide all the advantages offered by a leading academic medical center including the latest technology, access to innovative treatment options, and referrals to world renowned specialists, all the while maintaining the focus on personalized, comprehensive care.

I can now be found at 230 W. Monroe Street, Suite 1925. My new practice name is Rush University Internal Medicine; however, despite the expansiveness of the name, my individual role as your physician will remain unchanged. As I have attended to your acute illnesses and injuries, I have always hoped to guide you to a course of health and wellness. You will still receive the same quality focused care that you have come to expect, but with far greater resources. However, I do realize that change can be difficult, and I hope to make this a smooth transition.

For more information regarding all of the plans accepted by RUMC, please visit www.rush-health.com and click on “Insurance Networks” on the green menu bar.

I welcome this new and exciting opportunity to enhance and enrich your patient care experience. I look forward to our continued partnership in the pursuit of health and happiness. If you have any questions at all regarding the transition, please contact my office at 312-942-3100. It has been a pleasure caring for you and your family members. I look forward to seeing you soon.

Sincerely,
Ernesto Villegas, MD
